The current cases of monkeypox are primarily spreading among social networks of gay, bisexual and other men who have sex with men.

The decision would mean the US agency would have to send more personnel to fight the international outbreak.

HHS is “continuing to explore options” to prevent the spread of the virus through skin-on-skin contact, an agency spokesman said. The agency will hold a press conference on monkeypox to be held on Monday.

A White House spokesperson told Politico that the administration is “evaluating the situation” and “will take appropriate action” if necessary.

A declaration from President Biden's administration is expected as soon as the end of the week, sources close to the matter told Politico.

Becerra, meanwhile, had praised WHO's move as a "call to action" on Saturday.

"Monkeypox has spread around the world and we will continue to take decisive action to tackle it both here in the US and, working in concert with our partners abroad, globally," Becerra said in a statement. "We are determined to accelerate our response in the days ahead."

Some 4,639 confirmed cases of monkeypox had been tallied in the US as of Wednesday, including 1,228 in New York state, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

In New York City alone, 1,148 have been diagnosed, data shows.

"Cases in NYC are increasing, and there are likely more cases that have not been diagnosed," NYC Health's website reads.

"Anyone can get and spread monkeypox. The current cases are primarily spreading among social networks of gay, bisexual and other men who have sex with men (MSM)."

Some health experts said they agreed that monkeypox should be declared a public health emergency.

"I do think it deserves to be one," Tom Inglesby, director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security at the Bloomberg School of Public Health, told Politico.

"We're having a lot of challenges around the country with their rate of rise in terms of new cases. It isn't an emergency posing a ... moving ... and has the potential to spread

All this will do is give Phony Fauci another chance to start with masks 24/7, lockdowns and everything else that he can make people do to make himself look better for the Sunday Morning news shows. Come to think of it, he has been mighty quiet on this hasn't he.
