- Following Sen. Dianne Feinstein's death, California Gov. Gavin Newsom must appoint a replacement.
- Sunday evening, he announced that EMILYs List President Laphonza Butler would hold the seat.
- FEC and voter registration records, however, indicate Butler lives in Maryland.

California Gov. Gavin Newsom's interim replacement for Sen. Dianne Feinstein doesn't appear to actually live in California, records show.

Feinstein died at the age of 90 years old on September 28. Though she had already announced that she would not be running for reelection for an additional term, her death required Newsom to appoint a temporary replacement for her until a special election can be held.

On Sunday night, Newsom announced his decision to appoint Laphonza Butler to fill Feinstein's seat in the interim. Before the appointment, Butler served as the president of EMILYs List, a group whose goal is to elect Democratic women to office who favor access to abortion.

But according to a filing with the Federal Election Commission from September 2023, Butler doesn't live in California, nor anywhere close to the state. Instead, it appears she lives in Silver Spring, Maryland, a Washington, DC suburb.

During his visit to Phoenix, Biden delivered a warning about the fragile state of American democracy. He also took the opportunity to pay tribute to his late friend and Republican Senator John McCain.

Following this event, Fox News anchor Laura Ingraham invited Ned Ryun founder and CEO of American Majority and television commentator Benjamin (Ben) Domenech on 'The Ingraham Angle' to discuss the rhetoric used by President Biden and the Democratic Party against its opponents.

She took to X, formerly known as Twitter, to share the news with her followers and update them more on the issue. However, the internet did not respond positively to her bashing of Biden and brutally slammed her for not being "credible".
