AND/OR HUMANITY- all had a fiduciary relationship as well)

Congress enacted the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 out of a broad intent "to preserve and promote the integrity of public officials and institutions. " The statute addressed a number of concerns about the ethical behavior of public officials. Title VI of the statute (hereinafter "the independent counsel statute") established a mechanism for the appointment of individuals to lead independent investigations and prosecutions in certain circumstances. The statute originally designated these individuals as "special prosecutors" and later renamed them as "independent counsels. " One of the most commonly known examples of appointments of independent counsels under the statute involved incidents known generally as Whitewater. In 1994, Kenneth Starr was appointed as independent counsel to investigate potential violations of federal criminal or civil law related to William Bill Clinton and/or Hillary Rodham Clinton's relationship with Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association, Whitewater Development Corporation, or Capital Management Services, as well as any allegations arising out of that investigation. That investigation led to a myriad of charges for a number of individuals, but did not include indictments of the William Bill Clinton and/or Hillary Rodham Clinton.
